Foreword

For the past twenty years I lived in an apartment in Northampton that had a roof-top terrace, and I took thousands of photos of the Northampton skyline and its surrounding landscape at all hours of the day, in every seasons. I recently moved, and these are now my lost horizons. I am sharing a sample of them in this exhibit.

Special thanks to Coldwell Bankers Realty for hosting this show, and in particular to Mike Packard for making it happen.

A photograph of a calm river or lake in the morning, shrouded in a thick, white mist. Two people are kayaking in the middle ground, their figures and the water around them perfectly reflected in the still surface. The background is a dense line of trees with autumn-colored foliage (yellows and oranges) partially obscured by the fog. The sky is a pale, uniform grey. In the top left corner, some dark, leafy branches hang down into the frame.

Emerging from a Diaphanous Mist

This photo was taken under the Coolidge Bridge, in Northampton, on a foggy winter morning. The water was perfectly still.

A Sliver of Light

Early morning. Fog covering the Connecticut River valley. The sun is about to burst, and illuminates a thin layer of fog covering the mountain tops. It gives the Seven Sisters the feel of a giant ocean wave...

Early Morning Sun on the Town Hall

It's early morning,
and the sun is rising behind the Holyoke Range,
piercing the pale yellowish color of the foggy valley.

Lonely Bird over Fog Dragon

I was going for the fog dragon that was following the Connecticut River, when this single bird appeared in the shot. It has now become my favorite part of this panoramic of the Seven Sisters.

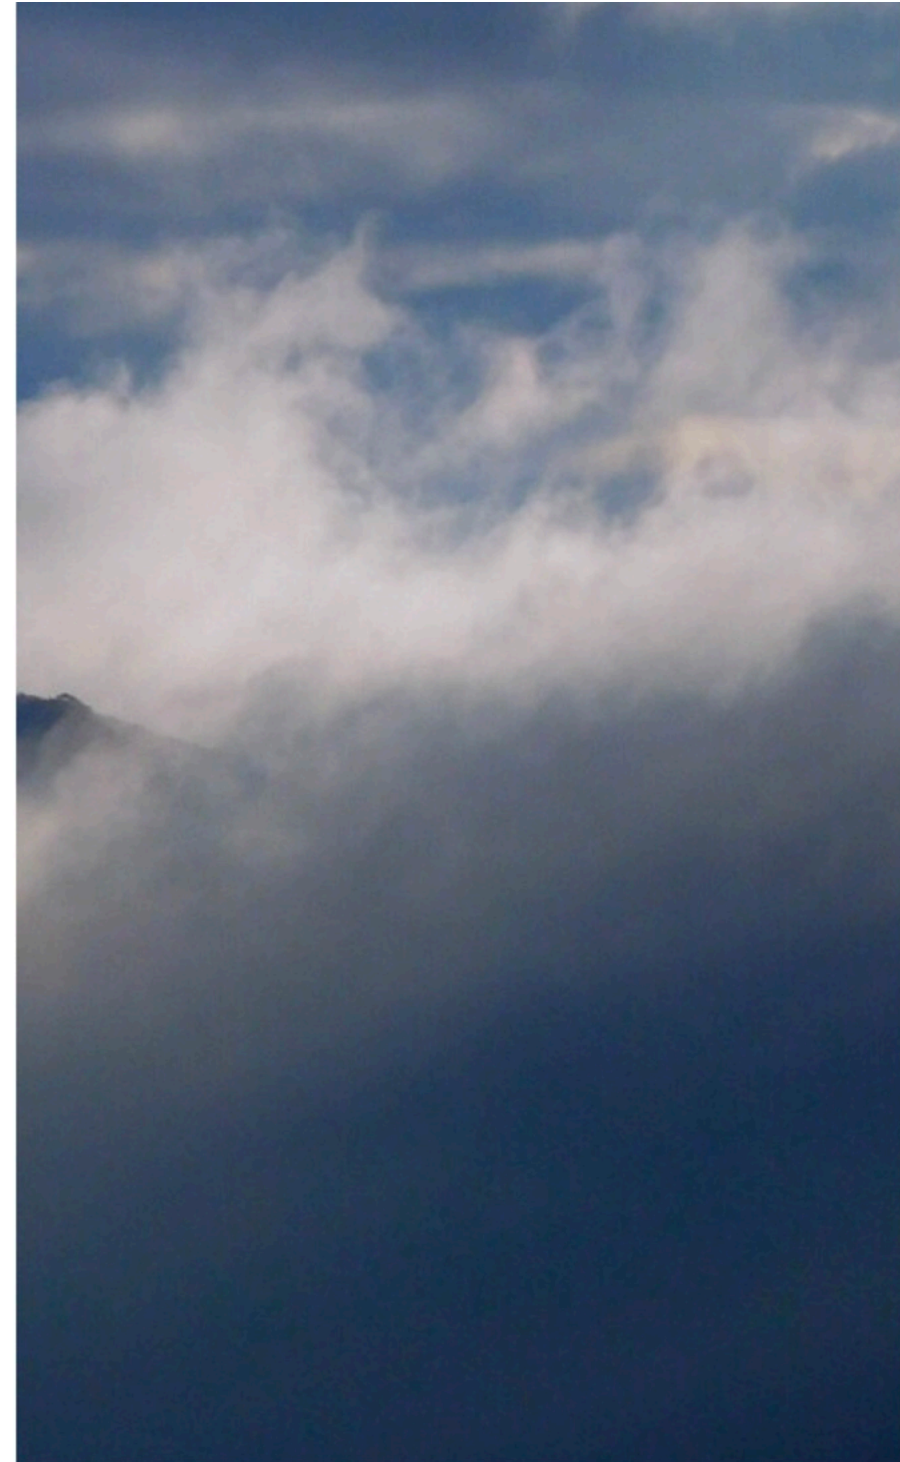

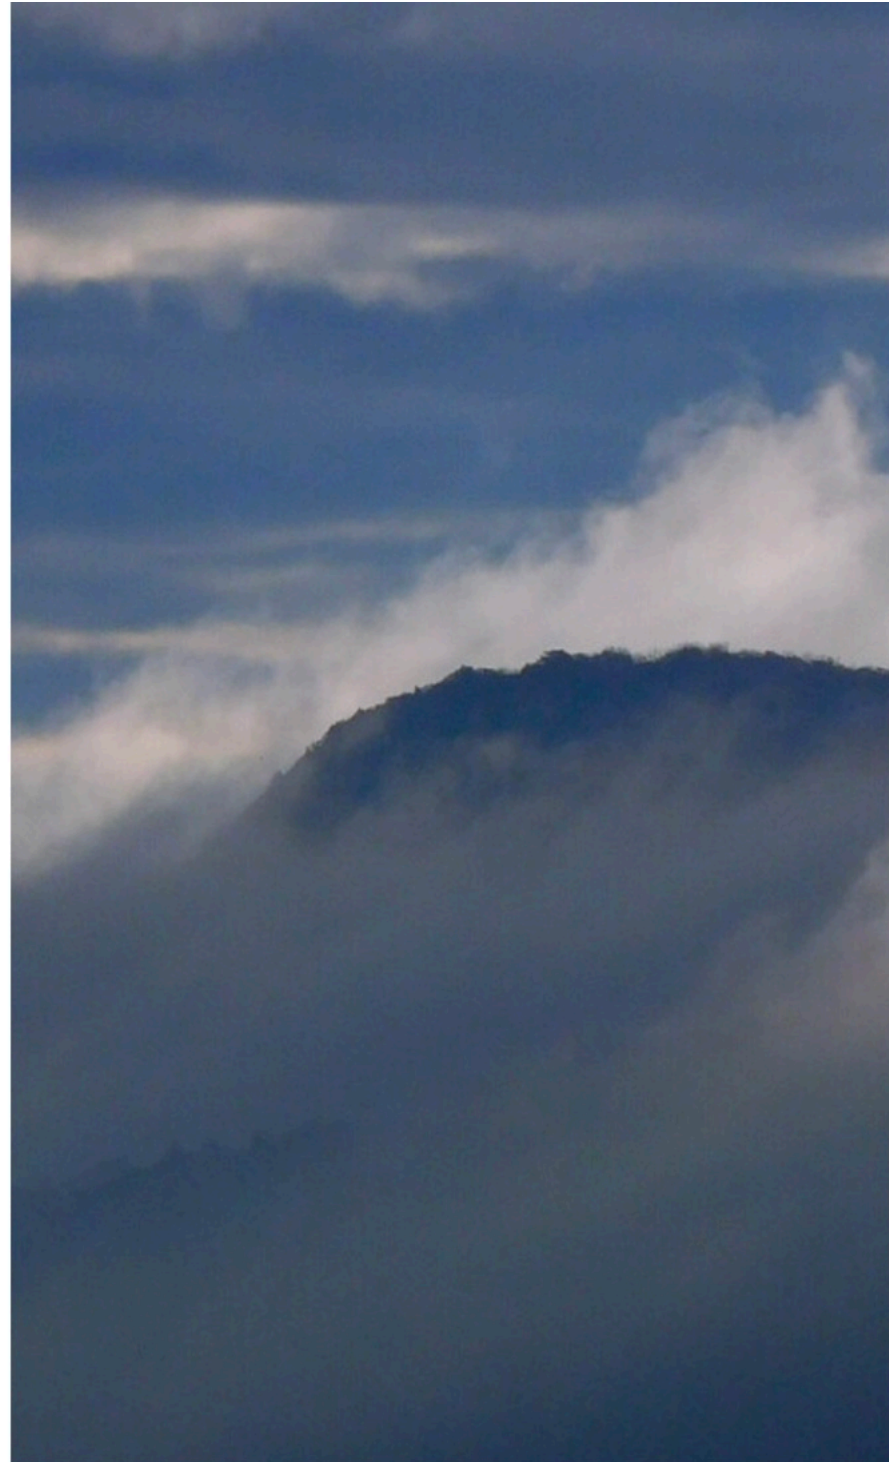

Freckled Skies

The Northampton town hall emerges over the landscape of the Holyoke Range in this orangey freckled sunrise sky.

Crashing Clouds

Triptych of an early morning shot of Bare Mountain, one of the Seven Sisters, emerging from the clouds rolling up from the Connecticut River.

Meeting at the Town Hall

Birds watching a particularly bright sunrise on top of the Northampton town hall. A nice parallel with the activities that take place regularly a few feet below...

Dominique Thiébaut was born in Paris, France, studied briefly at the École des Beaux Arts and the University of Paris, and moved to the Pioneer Valley in the 1980s to study at the University of Massachusetts. Like many residents, he never left the valley, and adopted it as his home, and currently lives in Northampton, MA.

He is an avid photographer, spending every opportunity to capture the beauty of our ever changing New England skies.
